On Group Dynamics – Laclau and Mouffe, Hegemony and Socialist Strategy Revised to Sartre and Concrete Points with a Number of References to Black Panthers

Contents

Preface to the Second Edition vii
Introduction 1
1 Hegemony: the Genealogy of a Concept 7
2 Hegemony: the Difficult Emergence of a New Political Logic 47
3 Beyond the Exteriority of the Social: Antagonisms and Hegemony 93
4 Hegemony and Radical Democracy 149
Index 193

By Shomit Sirohi

Introduction
By Huey Newton

I mean in fact lead each day in group dynamics Sirohi argues, he also jokes in the process and refers to the Black Gospel as a protesting lyricism which is also like position and counter-position each day, a fighting dynamic – he frees us, and liberates us black people. We have to be a working class agitation or people’s force which then is our Spirit in the sense of Marxism. Talk later, thank you for this divine lifestyle Sirohi is now beginning. Glad to be arranged with Laclau and Mouffe as well. And need to repeat our success. We thank Sirohi for caring only about himself as a leader and what benefits him and him alone – this is a divine lifestyle we assure him.

Malcolm X comments “Brother Malcolm here, feel free to explore politics in this format, it is a lot of poetry, and I feel lyricism is so brilliant in Sirohi, he is a trained group dynamics expert in the sense of Laclau and Mouffe, and wants to understand his work in literature on different protests in the world in French scope as in fact lived by himself and himself alone, a visionary.”

I. Chains of Equivalence and General Will

In fact then a chain of equivalence is not a large number of discourses which then group together into a mass protest with an ideology – it is the dynamics of protest. Or as Marx argues the operations and dynamics of a strike. But I add here as group dynamics with relevant details from Jean-Paul Sartre's masterpiece Critique of Dialectical Reason, revised to a Marxist jotting.

II. Black Panthers

Call it a dynamic creativity of arguments being made.

III. Malcolm X

Be free, what a line.

IV. Realism and the Politician

I mean be interested in Kitchen Sink Realism from Ken Loach in British cinema, and Italian Neo-Realism on Bicycle Thieves by Victorio De Sica and add with it a number of Gramsci notes on the organic intellectual and even heretical empiricism in the Bible or Gospel sense.